The Ewing Maclae family of Cathkin were important Glasgow merchants, many of whom were associated with the University of Glasgow. Humphrey Ewing Maclae (1773-1860), was recorded by Addison as a West Indian proprietor; and James Ewing (1775-1853), a Glasgow merchant and politician, had estates in Jamaica and both had involvement in the slave trade of the West Indies. In the portrait, Lady Hamilton's hair is bound and braided in a self-conscious attempt at a Grecian coiffure, designed to complement Emma's famous Grecian profile or here Elpis, the Goddess of Hope. The cameo is identical to that in the National Maritime Museum (JEW0338), there attributed to William Tassie, this in a gilt-metal mount and set in a black frame; the British Museum has a similar but intaglio image (1867,0708.1), in amber glass, set in gold frame with suspension loop attached, for use as a seal and supposed to have been owned by Lord Nelson. A left-facing hardstone cameo with a very similar image was sold at Sotheby's, Trafalgar - Nelson and The Napoleonic Wars, including The Matcham Collection, 5 October, 2005, lot 154.
